After a general introduction to Bradley's metaphysics and its logical foundations, Mander shows that much of Bradley's philosophy has been seriously misunderstood. Mander argues that any adequate treatment of Bradley's thought must take full account of his unique dual inheritance from the traditions of British empiricism and Hegelian rationalism. An introduction to Bradley's metaphysics / | University of ... Mander (Manchester College, Oxford) offers a general introduction to the metaphysics of F.H. Bradley (1846-1924). Faulting the dominant interpretation that associates Bradley closely with Hegel, Mander contends that Bradley's philosophy "is a unique combination of empiricism and rationalism, and cannot be understood by emphasizing one element at the expense of the other."
